Why Have We Used 316 Grade Stainless Steel?

We believe 316 grade stainless steel is the perfect grade of stainless steel to use at the coast for the cost price versus performance of the products. 316 grade is an austenitic stainless steel, containing 18% chromium and 10% nickel, and also a low carbon content. Due to this it has an excellent corrosion resistance in a wide variety of environments, and has good resistance to oxidation. The nickel content is what makes it resistant against rusting, and it contains more nickel than 304 grade stainless steel, making it even more effective against corrosion compared to 304 grade stainless steel.

Downgrading the stainless steel quality to a 200 series grade stainless steel, means that even though they have similar mechanical and physical properties to the 316 grade, there is decreased nickel content. The nickel is replaced by manganese which results in weak corrosion resistance, and high carbon content leaves the stainless steel susceptible to stress corrosion cracking.
